India is taking giant steps with its space exploration programme and that means a world of fun for everyone. This is Discovery Now with Jennifer Pauley.

As India reaches for the moon, one company is gearing up to offer the country its first space-themed park. But more than just an amusement centre, the 65-acre park called Space World India will help create understanding of aerospace science in an entertaining way. Complete with a space camp, an aviation camp, fun rides demonstrating weightlessness, robotics, rocketry and even scuba diving, this is a place that its developers hope will provide a lifetime experience that will fascinate researchers, students, tourists and children alike. And Space World's location, Pune, couldn't be more fitting. This is a city known for learning, having more than a hundred educational institutes and nine universities. Now, who said learning can't be fun? This is Jennifer Pauley for Discovery Now. Discovery Now is written and produced by the National Institute of Aerospace.
